

Environmental Medicine supervises individuals with health problems or conspicuous investigation findings, that are pulled together with environmental factors either by themselves or by a doctor.

The possible impacts and damages are very diverse and are - as in any rapidly evolving field of knowledge - often discussed controversially and emotionally.

Therefore it is important to scientifically recognize the most common environmental diseases, treat and prevent them and to identify possible alternatives.

---

Related links {loadposition linklist}